“ About two years ago, my dad invited me to a Cubs game at Wrigley Field against the Brewers with his two friends, Patrick and Gary. At first, I didn't think much of it. Honestly, I expected not to enjoy myself since I never even liked watching baseball on TV, but that perspective changed pretty quickly.

The moment we got in the car and Patrick and Gary started absolutely tearing into my dad, I knew it was going to be a good day. I laughed the entire drive there and back, especially when my dad's phone flew out the window on the highway. Even though the Cubs lost, I still had a great time at the game — especially getting ice cream afterward with those little Coke spoons.

To most people, it probably sounds like just another random summer day, but it ended up meaning a lot more to me than that. Between the game, my dad losing his phone out the window, getting ice cream after, and then somehow forgetting his phone at the ice cream shop too, the thing that stuck with me most was the conversation Patrick and I had while walking back to the car while my dad and Gary looked for his phone.

He talked to me about cherishing days like that and appreciating what I have while I have it. Even though I only ever had one truly meaningful conversation with Patrick, it ended up being one of the most memorable conversations of my life.

May Patrick rest in peace.
